Intensive seminar on the "Holocaust by Bullets," training educators in Yahad's field-research methodology and the use of archival records and eyewitness testimony as classroom primary sources

Software Engineer

35 years of professional experience building software, including for government, Internet and corporate organizations

Holocaust Memorial Sites Visited

21+ sites across Germany, Austria, and Poland — including Auschwitz-Birkenau, Treblinka, Sobibor, Belzec, Dachau, Mauthausen, Buchenwald, Mittelbau-Dora, Bergen-Belsen, Sachsenhausen, Stutthof, and other memorial sites

THE GAP

Most students will never visit a Holocaust museum, due to geography, budget constraints, or scheduling limitations.

After witnessing the power of Holocaust memorials firsthand and working in Holocaust education, I recognized this critical gap.

As a software engineer, I had the skills to build something that could reach these underserved students. As someone deeply committed to Holocaust memory, I knew this work was essential.

MISSION

"Never forget" requires reaching the next generation—all of them.

Edim complements the work of museums and memorials by serving students who cannot access them. Different tools for different contexts, but always the same mission: ensuring Holocaust memory continues through education.

Today's students are digital learners, engaging with the world through screens as naturally as earlier generations did through print. Edim meets them in that medium—delivering rigorous, primary-source history in an interactive form that invites them to engage as active witnesses, not passive readers.

DEVELOPMENT APPROACH

Edim's content is rigorously sourced from authoritative Holocaust education institutions and scholarly sources. Every historical fact, testimony excerpt, and educational framework is grounded in established Holocaust scholarship.

The software is built for educators—integrating with Canvas and Google Classroom, providing built-in assessments, and offering customization options to fit diverse curriculum needs.
